During the last couple of decades, manlifts and aerial platforms have become a common sight in industrial maintenance applications and on construction job sites. These equipment provide an easy way to lift employees near what must be performed on a stable platform apparatus, enabling employees to do tasks with greater safety and comfort rather than being perched on top of ladders or scaffoldings.

The manlift is like other industrial tools in that they are safe when used properly. As they elevate employees above ground level or floor, accidents could easily occur and this might lead to serious injuries or fatalities for both the operators of the manlift as well as whoever passerby who may be unlucky enough to be standing beneath.

There are various models of manlifts. The majority fall into 1 of 2 categories: the articulating boom lift, that has the capability of both horizontal and vertical movement and the scissors lift, that is capable of moving upward and downward.
